DETHRONE
THE DIVINE
BY: MR. RAY

Dethrone the Divine:

An RPG for the God in You

By: Matt Mr. Ray Adams

Awesome DPS System by: R. E. Chaos Grenade Davis

Special thanks to: Naomi Randolph (For putting up with the constant question What do you think of this?)

Thank you to the play testers who volunteered their time to make this what it is: Laura McMill, Jamie Kelsey, R. E. Davis, Sam Richardson, Jo, Argon Lorien, and Nye Elder.

Artwork by: Gustave Dore.

Dethrone the Divine and Awesome DPS are under the Creative Commons Attribution-ShareAlike 4.0

Disclaimer: I come from a limited back ground, in the American Southwest. I grew in a small town with a mainly white population. My knowledge of divinity, myths, and religion in general is limited to what I ve researched both from an academic standpoint as well as a neopagan in my youth. If I have included anything insensitive, ignorant, or hurtful, know that it is not my intention. I welcome any criticisms about this game. If there is concern, please reach out to me at mrrayrpg@gmail.com

HERE'S HOW IT IS: GODS ARE DICKS. THEY ALWAYS HAVE BEEN. THEY ASK TOO MUCH OF HUMANS, DON'T THEY? THE BEST LIVESTOCK, A CHUNK OF YOUR MONEY, AND IN SOME CASES, A FIRST BORN CHILD. WHAT DO HUMANS GET IN EXCHANGE? A PROMISE THAT OBLITERATION WOULD NOT COME AS LONG AS THE OFFERING WAS PAID. AS LONG AS THE PRAISE WAS GIVEN.

THEN THERE WAS THE RISE OF TECHNOLOGY. FROM STICKS AND FIRE TO SATELLITES IN SPACE, CONNECTING THE WORLD IN A COMMON THREAD. GLOBALIZATION. A MODERN DAY TOWER OF BABEL. ONLY IT WASN'T TO BREAK PAST THE CLOUDS TO MEET GOD. IT WAS DONE TO ESCAPE THE SHACKLES OF EARTH, REACHING FOR THE STARS.

NOT TO BE OUTDONE, GODS HAVE HAD TO REBRAND AND REINVENT THEMSELVES IN THESE CHANGING TIMES. NEW GODS HAVE SPRUNG UP AS A PART OF THIS EVER CHANGING LANDSCAPE. GODS OF THE AMERICAN DREAM. GODS OF THE WORLD WIDE WEB. GODS WITH NAMES LIKE CURIOSITY. FACES AND REBRANDS OF THE FORGOTTEN. GODS OF CAVEMEN WHO HAVE WOKEN UP TO A WORLD WHO LOST THEIR NAME. NOW IT IS THEIR DREAM TO FOLLOW MAN TO THE STARS AND SPREAD THEIR DOCTRINE, TRYING TO GAIN TRUE OMNIPOTENCE.

BUT NOT ALL GODS ARE CONTENT WITH THIS. THERE ARE STILL MANY OUT THERE WHO WANT THEIR OWN SLICE OF PRAISE. THOSE WHO SEE THE INJUSTICE AND HATE IN THE WORLD AND SEEK TO RESHAPE IT. THOSE WHO WANT TO SHAPE THE WORLD TO THEIR OWN VIEWS. SOME WHO JUST WANT TO SIT ON THE THRONE OF THE WORLD THEMSELVES.

THESE GODLINGS TAKE UP THEIR WEAPONS AND GIFTS TO RISE UP AND DETHRONE THE DIVINE!

DETHRONE THE DIVINE IS A TABLE-TOP ROLE PLAYING GAME IN WHICH THE PLAYERS TAKE OVER THE ROLES OF VARIOUS CHARACTERS WHO HAVE THE POWER TO ASCEND TO GODHOOD AND SET THE WORLD BACK ON PATH.

HOW TO PLAY:

Dethrone the Divine relies on a simple system based mainly on narrative actions. The game is meant to be played with 3-6 players. 1 person acts as the Guide (known in other systems as the "GM" or game master) while the other players take on the role of characters in the world attempting to overthrow the gods. While the introduction takes a heroic take to return the world to what it once was, it's very possible for characters to be motivated for selfish reasons. Who wouldn't want to sit on that throne being praised, right?

There are five main attributes to a player's character. Might (a character's strength and endurance), Grace (a character's physical control of self.), Skill (a character's ability to perform a specialized task), Aura (a character's natural presence and charisma) and Spirit (a character's connection to magic). Every attribute will be used when resolving a conflict.

Resolutions are solved by rolling "dice pools". Dice pools are made up of several d6 (or six-sided dice). Every roll that is either a 5 or a 6 is counted as a success. Whoever rolls the most successes during a resolution gets to narrate the result of the action. In the event of a tie between a Guide and player, a compromise must be made. The amount of dice rolled is based upon a character's relevant attribute and any applicable modifiers.

The opposite may also apply. Hindrances determined by the Guide may work against the players dice pools. For instance, poor lighting, uneven flooring, being incredibly outnumbered, etc. These can all affect how many dice a character can roll, a Guide should consider -1 dice for every complication.

Kinds of modifiers:

- +1 dice for every applicable trait.
- +1 dice for every adversity token a player adds to their roll
- +1 dice for any entertaining, interesting, or outstanding idea that a player comes up with (at the Guide's discretion)
- +1 dice for every situational advantage as determined by the Guide.

Mechanically, armor should be considered a -1 dice hindrance against an opponent. If a character is attacking an NPC (Non player character) that is wearing a leather duster, they should roll their Might -1d6. Heavier armor options, such as a bulletproof vest, would move up the scale to -2d6. Full riot gear or full plate would be -3d6, and anything higher than that would be an armor options plus a magical effect.

Author's note: While the example given is Might -1d6, this isn't the universal stat for combat. If a character uses mainly a magic spell (fireball is a good one, I hear), then it would be Spirit -1d6.

Speaking of magical effects, as a being on the path to becoming divine, players gain a Divine Dice. It is vitally important that this dice looks different from your other dice. This dice has a wider success range. 4-6 is considered a success. The divine dice can be used whenever you're doing anything in combination with your given domain. This dice grants two additional options:

- If the player rolls a success on the Divine Dice and wins the Resolution Roll, the player gets to narrate a Boost — a bonus effect to the intended result of their action.

- If the player lost the Resolution Roll, but still rolled a success on the Divine Dice, then a Slip occurs. A slip means the character didn't succeed as intended, but the player still gets to narrate an opportunity that arose from their misfortune.

A player can choose to use their Divine dice to "push" outside of their domain. Normally, the Divine dice is used when a character is operating within their domain. For example, a life domain attempting to heal someone with magic would uses their Spirit + Divine Dice. But if the same character wanted to add a Dice to pick a lock, they could do that by declaring they want to "push" their domain. The roll would then be Skill + Divine Dice.

A push comes at a cost. If the Divine dice rolls a 1 or 2, the Guide gets to narrate an extra event against the player (even if the player succeeds on their action!)

Two or more characters can Help one another towards a singular goal. When this happens, they add all of their modifiers together and each of them roll their Dice Pools separately, but they use the highest result between them. This increases their chance of success but subjects all of them to the consequences of failure (including any blunders should they decide to Push.)

Confused? Here's an example. The group wants to overwhelm a minotaur. The minotaur has a 10CR. To match that, two Eternals with 5 Might each roll. The Minotaur has 7 successes, the pair has 3 and 5. Together, it's 8. The Minotaur would lose a CR. If one of the players pushed for their roll and it failed, both players will suffer a loss (like getting knocked through a wall!)

Failing a roll isn't always such a bad thing. A failure grants one experience check. Six checks is a level up. When a character levels up, they may add another point to an attribute, add another special trait, gain an additional domain, or gain an acolyte. The acolyte will do nearly anything that is required of them, as long as it does not violate their personal morals.

Author Note: Before we go any further, I should make something clear. Dethrone the Divine is not a game for any sort of racism, transphobia, homophobia, or ableism. This is a hard line into the heart and soul of this book and setting. Gods and demigods of myth had same sex relationships. Some would change genders, or manifest as different genders as needed. Some didn't have use of their legs. These weren't limiting factors to the Divine in the least bit, nor should it be in this game. If this bothers you, talk with your group before going forward. If an agreement can't be made, try playing another game. My goal for this game is for it to be as accessible as possible. Thank you for understanding.

Character Creation

Name and Concept

It's imperative to give your character an identity. Who are they, and why do they have a bone to pick with The Forgotten? Is it personal? Do they believe in true right and wrong? Is it their own personal ambition that sets them against the ruling Holy of Holies?

Your concept can be short and vague, giving yourself some wiggle room, but precise enough that you have something to look and build on. In mythology, we see this often with characters such as Thor the Thunderer, the Wrathful Poseidon, Loki the Trickster, etc. The concept is a part of building your dice pool and cannot be reduced due to hindrances.

Character Creation:

- Give the character a name and concept.
- Assign points to the character's attributes (Might, Grace, Skill, Aura and Spirit)
- Establish 4 Traits and 2 domains
- Pick an origin for your Eternal character
- Calculate Health and Mental Resolve
- Assign a Following and Fear ranking
- List up to 5 types of gear

Attributes

Distribute 16 points across the 5 attributes. Each attribute determines how easily a task may come to a character. That's not to say some seemingly simple tasks won't come with their own failures. Ask any mechanic if they've ever dropped a nut or bolt into an engine they were working on. This isn't the definitive say on how many dice are needed for a roll. Rather, it's a starting ground. Any concepts, origins, or traits may also be added to these for a temporary bonus.

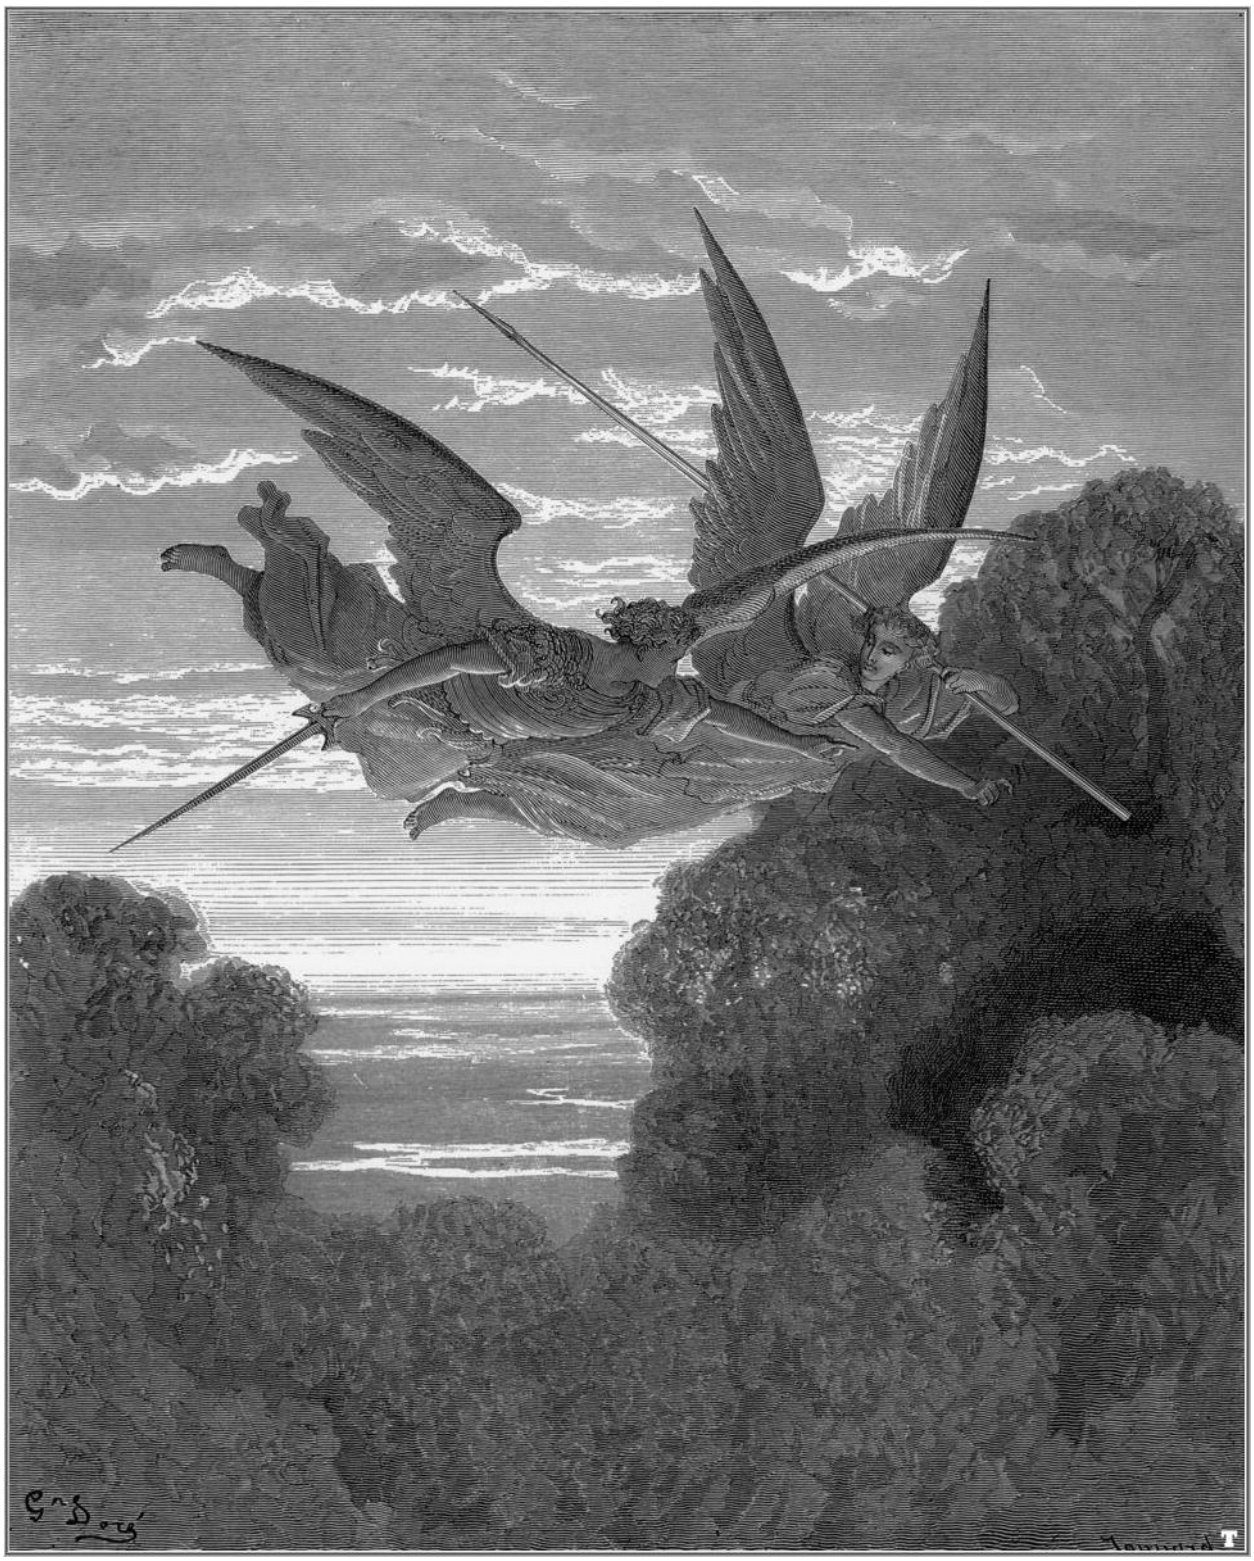
-Might: Might is all about strength, physicality, endurance, and melee. Everything that can be handled by force will be handled with a Might roll.

-Grace: Grace covers dexterity, dodging, flexibility, and ranged attacks. If it involves skilled control of the body, it's a Grace roll.

-Skill: In lieu of having a long list of skills to specialize in, this game system instead makes it a single attribute. Characters talented in specialized tasks that require a general know how will be a Skill roll.

-Aura: Aura is literally the presence of self. Call it natural charisma. Call it attractiveness. Call it the je na sais quoi that icons have which inspires masses to follow them. Aura is what a player rolls for persuading, inspiring, seducing, or intimidating.

-Spirit: The most difficult of the five attributes to explain. Spirit is magic. All the beauty, wonder, and terror that can be wrapped into that. Magic is a chaotic force that allows anyone, especially the Divine, to influence and change the world. There is no list of spells, rather, the difficulty of spell casting will rely on the CR agreed by the Guide and the player.



Traits

A trait helps define your character and differentiate them for other adventurers. It expands on characteristics such as what a character is good at, what connections they may have, or other advantages they may have. Characters start out with 4 traits. Traits can be created by describing them based on one of the following:

- A Quality, such as strong, determined, witty, cunning, outspoken, etc.

- A Background. This can be either professional or some other training. “Learned Kung fu from monks”, “Combat Veteran”, “Schooled in magic”.

- A Relationship with another character. This could be “Protective of a younger sibling”, “Indebted to my Rival”, “Contact within a criminal organization”, etc.

- A Special Trait is a unique ability or item that can be used to give you access to your Divine Dice. Thor has a hammer, Poseidon is usually depicted with a trident, or Son Wukong’s magic staff. These are specific examples, but it is encouraged for a player to come up with their own special trait. This can often be used to build your own following.

Domains

Possibly one of the most vital parts of being a Divine is having a Domain. This is a component or concept the character works best in or with. Over time, a character will learn to command such domains with absolute power. That is, once The Forgotten have fallen.

To start, a character should choose 2 domains. These can be physical elements such as storms and fire, or concepts like diplomacy and music. In some cases, these can be used to define character qualities, but domains will be vague enough to be interpreted in several different ways. This works in the favor of players, as the domains chosen will be a deciding factor on whether or not a Divine dice is appropriate.

Origins

Divine will have very different paths that they started out onto get to where they are in the game. Some may be very old, others may be a newer concept. These work in game to give improvements and perks throughout play. Players should choose one Origin for their character.

Demigod: You're not truly a god, but you're not a nobody either. Somewhere in your bloodline, you've been touched by the divine. It could be angelic ancestry or coming from the bloodline of great kings of legend. Examples: Gilgamesh, Hercules, Maui

-Perk: +1 dice to Skill rolls, add an additional domain

God of Myth: At your peak, there temples constructed for you, cults worshiped you, and sacrifices made you strong. Now you survive on the praise of elders and the neopagans who try to reinvent you. Examples: Odin, Ishtar, Lugh

-Perk: You gain an additional Bond or Bane with another player due to your reputation. You may add a dice whenever you're working in your domain.

Rebel God: You were always the outcast of your pantheon. No one ever came to praise you, instead their fear gave you strength. You never needed approval, though you may still crave it. Example: Hades, Loki, Chernobog

-Perk: You may force the Guide to reroll 1 success. While most Divine require Following to heal, you may use either Following or Fear.

New God: You've been born of the ingenuity of mankind. Something has sprung up and called you into being. Some invention or a philosophical concept has breathed life into you.

-Perk: +1 dice when working in your domain, gain an additional following rank when starting.

Psychopomp: Since the beginning, you have served only Death. The Afterlife is a realm you know quite well, and you know the pathways to and back again quite well. Example: The Grim Reaper, Yama, Anubis, Valkyrie

-Perk: Gain either "Afterlife" or "Death" as a free domain. You may freely transport yourself and/or others to the spiritual realm.

Demon: Somewhere in your bloodline, a pact was made. Maybe a great grandparent made a deal for their soul, or an unholy attraction with an infernal spawned your family line. It could be that you're an ambitious demon yourself. In any case, you see a glaring weakness few others do, and you want what was promised. Examples: Azrael, Crowley, Lucifer

-Perk: Once per session, you may ask the Guide as to what, if anything, will sway a person to help you for a task. Once per session, you can reroll an Aura roll.

Starchild: You're out of this world! You come from a place very different from this one, from a race that moved up the evolutionary chain. You've come to Earth with a goal to help humanity, or to rule it. Examples: David Bowie, Superman, Prot from K-Pax

-Perk: +1 dice to Grace, you can reroll a failed roll per your Aura rank per game session.

Living Idol: Gods are made by the power of love, need, or belief. This can breathe life into object. What you are is limited to the human imagination. Maybe you're a hot toy from a past holiday season. You could be a puppet from a famous TV series. The possibilities are only limited by you and your Guide. Examples: Tickle-me Elmo, Furby, Kermit the Frog

-Perk: +1 dice to Grace. Choose two age groups (kids, teens, adults, etc.) You gain +1 dice when dealing with one and -1 dice when dealing with the other.

Fey: Mayhaps you've sprung from another time where you were a child who got lost in a realm of fantasy. You could be some aspect of an element made living. In any case, you have your own strict rules, an aversion to iron, and the boldness to set the word straight. Example: Leprechauns, Changelings, Pooka

-Perk: +1 dice to Aura. You have a small pocket dimension you can escape to with others. It takes 1 minute to create a gate, but can be closed instantly.

Child of Typhon: When something goes bump in the night, it's probably you. Typhon fathered many monsters, and many monsters had children of their own. That's you. Examples: Cerberus, Werewolves, Vampires

-Perk: +1 dice to Might, you gain a second (monstrous) form.

Dragon: A god whose followers a long dead. Dragons were the gods of dinosaurs, having the best features of the best hunters with an element as a breath weapon. Dragons have since learned to be shape-shifters to hide themselves among humans. Examples: Any mythology, specifically Zmeu.

-Perk: +1 dice to Spirit, gain a breath weapon and a second form.

Animal God: Myths and legends describe you as an animal, capable of speech and stories to explain the world. As time has gone by, though, you have had to become domesticated. Now your church is social media. Your followers are on the other side of the net. Your praise comes from likes and follows, but a god still lurks in your form. Examples: Nala, Grumpy Cat, JiffPom

Second Forms:
A transformation that may show a Divine's "true" face. Mechanically, this means either swap one attribute with another, or Add 1 to any 1 stat while transformed. Other Divine may take this as a Special Trait.

-Perk: +1 dice to Aura, a second form, and an acolyte (who functions as your owner to the outside world)

Health and Mental Resolve

Dethrone the Divine involves two different indicators of a character's wellness. Health and Resolve. Health is determined by adding Might + Grace. While Might contains constitution as part of it, Grace contains the other part, control of oneself. For example, stubbing a toe. Whether or not that toe is broken is a matter of Might (constitution) but how well a person can walk on a stubbed toe is a matter of grace.

Resolve is an indicator for a character's stubbornness. Resolve calculated by Skill + Aura. Skills in other systems are often what handle a character's resolve, so there is little need to change it. Aura is one's presence. The two together gives a realistic picture of how willing a person is to go along with ideas that may sway them.

Author note: The reason Health and Resolve are divided up how they are is for simplicity. Health should be the physical attributes, Resolve is mental. Spirit is the odd one out, but still is special and extraordinary. It didn't factor into either, in my opinion.

Following and Fear

The power of the Divine are derived from their Following. How many people believe in them can drastically affect their strength, or their ability to heal. A strong following can give a Divine the semblance of invincibility.

The Following rank is determined by the Guide at the beginning of the session. This gives players an idea of how they are viewed by the world as a whole. Following ranks from 1-5, 1 being obscure cult level, 5 being a massive following across the world stage. Following ranks can change depending on the actions of the Divine characters by either gaining or losing followers.

Following rank is used, literally to give the Divine more of an umpf. It is the deciding factor that separates the Divine from talented spell casters. The scales of following and fear balance how Divine should act.

Following rank	Level of following	Effect
1	Small cult, a few scattered believers, urban myth.	A Divine may heal 1d6 once per session.
2	Folk hero, local celebrity, secret societies based around the Divine symbols.	A Divine gains a dedicated following. These people will do favors when asked, as long as it doesn't violate your core message.
3	Nationwide fame, well known, churches constructed in your name.	The range of success goes up for all dice rolls. The range is now 4, 5, or 6.
4	The Divine is gaining worldwide reach. Multiple nations consider you a patron god.	When using Divine Dice, the Guide rolls 1d6. On an odd result, people within range will want to help you succeed in your task. On an even result, followers will fall down in praise.
5	Leading religion in the world. Outside of religious contexts, your name is referenced with reverence.	Divine Dice rolls range of success are now 3, 4, 5, or 6.

The Fear rank is also determined by the Guide to start of the games. Fear is a measure of how exposed a Divine is. Fear is measured 0-5. 0 means the world has no idea the Divine character has physically manifested. 5 means the world is fully aware, and their fear can turn the Divine mortal. If a Divine has reached a rank 5 fear, the world will unite to take them down.

Mechanically, the Fear is a tool the Guide can use against players. A Fear rank gets awarded if Divine characters expose their powers to mortals who are unaware of the holy war around them. This gives the Guide a Hard Move against the Divine, which can manifest itself in any fashion the Guide sees fit, including the creation of a nemesis to the player's character or making reality itself strike back against the Divine. In extreme cases, it can cause the Divine to lost following.

As a standard, players should start out with a Following of 1 and a Fear of 0 . These are for gods just starting out, or who have fallen into obscurity in a modern age.

Gear

To finish, characters should select up to five pieces of Gear. This gear should be different from the specialized item selected above. The gear chosen should be in line with what a character should logically be able to have. A soldier may carry around a survival knife, a healer may have a first-aid kit. All five slots do not have to be chosen during character creation. The Guide may rule whether gear can be used to add an extra dice to the dice pool.

Build Ideas

This section is devoted to some possible, easy build options for players to pick up, if they are having trouble coming up with an idea, or if they want to try something really odd.

Brick.
Domains: Industry, Order, (alternatively) Revolution.
Origin: Living Idol (favor with Engineers, bane with anti-establishment types)
Might: 5
Grace: 1
Skill: 0
Aura: 5
Spirit: 6
Traits: Strong, Tough, Blends in.
Special Trait: Transform into a brick warrior, +1 Might

Cornflake the Cat
Domain: Cleverness, Intelligence
Origin: Animal God (acolyte: Greta Olmunson)
Might: 1
Grace: 6
Skill: 5
Aura: 2
Spirit: 3
Traits: Wise, Curious, Formerly Bast, persuasive
Special Trait: Transforms into a humanoid cat goddess, swap grace and spirit

George
Domain: Knowledge, Education
Origin: Dragon
Might: 3
Grace: 2
Skill: 2
Aura: 4
Spirit: 6
Traits: Calm, Librarian, loner type, patient.
Special trait: Transforms into a golden dragon, +1 Spirit. Pure Light dragon breath (uses Spirit)

Conflict and Recovery

In terms of the game, Conflicts (such as combat) are handled like any other action. With a player rolling for their character opposed to the Guide's roll. With Forgotten Gods having a possibility of 12 or higher CR, it's advantageous for players to Help each other. In the event of a Tie, the conflict is treated like a stalemate, which may lend to some role play opportunities. Opposing sides may banter, exchange crude remarks, or use it as a chance to retreat.

In the event of a Success, the amount of the success should be subtracted from the losers dice pool or health points. For instance, if a warrior player crosses blades with an assassin, the warrior has 4 successes, the assassin has 3. If the assassin's overall CR is 6, then the warrior does 1 damage to the assassin, making the new CR 5.

For a player taking damage, the difference is taken from their HP. Using the example, if the warrior had 3 successes but the assassin has 4, the warrior would lose 1 HP.

Alternatively, instead of doing damage a Hindrance may be put in place. A hindrance may be taking a -1 dice roll, or it could be inflicting a negative status onto an opponent. Negative statuses can have names like Blind, Injured, Pinned, Knocked-Down, Humiliated, Distracted and so forth.

A character can recover through narrative means, or mechanically. As long as it makes sense for them to heal (such as through praise of followers, a miracle heal from another character, etc.) the Guide and players should outline the benefits of healing. Remember, one Following may be used for a character to recover 1d6 of either Health or Resolve.

Being the Guide of the game

The player who takes on the role of the Guide is responsible for helping and challenging the other players at the table. It is the duty of the Guide to come up with plots, enemies, details of the world around the characters, and arbitrating challenging scenarios.

Opponents and Challenges

The Guide is tasked with presenting situations for players to overcome, generally falling into two categories: Obstacles or Opponents. Often, these are not mutually exclusive. Obstacles need to be overcome, but opponents can keep fighting until they surrender, or they run out of health. In either case, both come with their own Challenge Ratings (abbreviated as CR) which establishes how many dice are in the Guide's dice pool to use in a resolution roll. There are also situational modifiers that modify a CR under special circumstances.

For example, a hitman for one of the gods may have a machine gun. This alone would be 6 dice (6CR). But if the hitman is in a dark temple, moving behind and hiding behind different columns for support, that can add another dice to the CR.

Opponents don't have different attributes. Instead, they just have their CR. The opponent's health is tracked by their CR. Every time an opponent takes damage, they lose a dice of their CR. This can be explained out in dramatic terms, such as a broken arm or a fractured rib. This can also be explained out of the opponent is being "battled" in conversational combat as taking hits to their emotional resolve on an issue.

Thug, easy challenge	2CR
Cop, moderate challenge	4CR
Hitman, difficult challenge	6CR
Assassin, Hard challenge	8CR
Mythological guardian, Extreme challenge	10CR
Divine, a god, Lethal challenge	12CR+

Crafting a Campaign

When it comes to building a campaign for Dethrone the Divine, it may help to think of it as a "godpunk" setting. Characters can see the strings that control the world around them, and they have a desire to change that. Another great resource to look at for guidance for this system would be the Neil Gaiman book "American Gods", as it gave me a lot of inspiration.

As it stands, the default setting for Dethrone the Divine is set in modern day. However, there is nothing standing in the way of telling a story in 1920s Depression Era America, or even in 10,000 BC. It may take some creative reskinning of some of the origins and enemies, but it's entirely doable.

The point is to have fun. It is highly encourage to have players sit down for a "session zero" before play. Talk about what would bother your players' characters in the world. What would they want to accomplish. Setting is important. Also, talk about the possible ties between the different characters. This can flavor in a lot of fun and interesting ways. For instance, during the playtest, the Fey Puck and a god of conspiracy theories were old friends and built a natural rapport.

If there is anything this book hasn't covered that comes up in play, the Guide can "hand wave" any rulings as they see fit, as long as it's generally considered fair. The main idea is that this is just a game, and everyone playing is there for fun. Because the Guide will be hit with odd situations (like what would the roll be for a dragon disguised as a pigeon taking a magical poo on a bad guy's car be?)

DETHRONE THE DIVINE

CHARACTER NAME: _____ PLAYER NAME:_____

CONCEPT:_____ PLAYER PRONOUNS:_____

CHARACTER PRONOUNS:_____ ORIGIN:_____

MIGHT
GRACE
SKILL
AVRA
SPIRIT

HEALTH		FOLLOWING
RESOLVE		FEAR

SPECIAL TRAIT ITEM:

_____

EXPERIENCE: ❑❑❑❑❑❑

TRAITS:_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

GEAR:_____

_____

_____

_____